Definition of High-Quality Early Childhood Program

A high-quality early childhood program is an inclusive environment that offers services at the highest possible levels for all children and families. These programs provide a safe environment, while promoting the physical, social emotional and cognitive development of all children. High quality environments celebrate and explore the culture, backgrounds and individuality of their children and families. The indicators of quality include, but are not limited to, policies and procedures and administrative practices that are best practices for the workforce, families and children. Teaching approaches are individualized for each child and are active, stimulating and engaging. Thoughtful standards about health and safety are considered at the licensing level and beyond. Families and community partners are included and valued partners and are invited into all aspects of care and education. All the indicators of quality combine to create an environment that leads to the highest outcomes and lifelong success for the youngest learners in our state.

Update as of July 2021: Previous iterations of the Nevada Silver State Stars QRIS included quality indicators as part of the rating criteria. These quality indicators will be included as a coaching tool moving forward but will no longer be factored into the star rating of programs. Information pertaining to the quality indicators will be collected via survey with a coach when a program submits for a new rating.

QRIS SPECIALIZATIONS

The Office of Early Learning and Development is eager to roll out the specialization program in areas such as Family Engagement, Diversity Equity and Inclusion, Quality Professional Culture. The specialization program is currently under development and review. Additional details are forthcoming.

Specializations are a chance for programs to celebrate areas of strength. These are optional opportunities to specialize in a way separate from the star rating. Specializations do not have an impact on QRIS star ratings. We currently have one area of quality specialization (Infant/Toddler); however, we plan to announce more as soon as they are confirmed and finalized.
